

Choosy Collectors

Seems the museum is holding a private auction for some rather picky buyers.

Five art collectors have been invited to an auction at the museum, each with a peculiar talent: They can tell whether or not they'll like a painting based on its name alone! When asked about this unique ability, the buyers said this:

Buyer 1: "I aim for a wide palette of art to display!"

Buyer 2: "I find the theme of repetition fascinating."

Buyer 3: "I think there are five - sometimes six - qualities that make a good painting"

Buyer 4: "A Q and A? Hm... I'm half interested..."

Buyer 5: "I can't stand pieces that are too short-sighted."

Each buyer already has an extensive collection of art – here are a few examples of the pieces they own:

Buyer 1: Seeing Red, Blue Skies, Skin Tan, and Silver Linings

Buyer 2: Spoons, The Lonely Bookkeeper, Broken Boombox, and Mess

Buyer 3: Amazement, Under Water, Inch by Inch, and Eden

Buyer 4: Praise Quetzalcoatl, Queer Joy, Equine Show, and Inquisition

Buyer 5: Final Work, The Meaning of Life, Once Upon a Time, and Welcome Home

The following pieces are to be auctioned off. It might be a bit tricky, but it's probably possible to figure out, for each piece, who'll be a "yes" and who'll be a "no".

Emerald Quest

A Quick Meeting

Indigo Sunset

Interruption

Untitled

Green Grass

A Sequined Pillow

Orange Bushes

Turquoise

Blank Frames

Amber

Hello!

End of an Era

Quartz

If a buyer's ever caught between two pieces, they just have to ask themselves...